ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Although I organized and wrote or rewrote much of the text, this resource is truly a group effort.

First, many thanks go to the curators in the Department of Greek and Roman Art for their comments on the contents, much of which was material already written by them: Carlos Picón, Joan Mertens, Elizabeth Milleker, Christopher Lightfoot, and Seán Hemingway, who was my kind and patient liaison to the department.

A debt of gratitude is also owed to Rebecca Arkenberg, who created the lesson plans; to graduate intern Iris Plaitakis, who created the Web site section and the “hunts” outside the Greek art galleries; to Emily Roth and Naomi Niles of the Uris Library, who, together with their interns Nicholas Gershberg and Avi Springer, compiled the bibliography and videography; to Alex Zlotnikov, who designed the time line; to Paul Caro, who designed the maps for the hunts; and to high school interns Melissa Barroso and Allison Dizzine, who checked and rechecked label copy against the text. Felicia Blum, Rika Burnham, Colette Czapski Hemingway, Nick Ruocco, Jean Sorabella (who also wrote the Greek architecture section), and especially Edie Watts, read the manuscript and gave suggestions that greatly improved it, as did its copyeditors Alexandra Bonfante-Warren and Philomena Mariani.

Further thanks go to the dozens of teachers who examined the earlier draft of this teachers’ resource and gave us valuable insights on how to improve it, and once again to Seán Hemingway, who provided the illustrations of bronze casting.

Finally, thanks to Masha Turchinsky, Education’s creative manager, for her enthusiastic hard work and good-natured shepherding on this resource.

FOREWORD TO TEACHERS

The Metropolitan Museum of Art is very pleased to provide you with some of our newest educational materials, Greek Art from Prehistoric to Classical: A Resource for Educators. These lesson plans, slides, posters, texts, and other materials provide many tools and approaches for creative use in your classroom and have been greatly improved by your colleagues' ideas and suggestions. These materials have also been adapted for use on the Museum's Internet site, www.metmuseum.org, where teachers will already find much educational material.

Michael Norris, Associate Museum Educator at the Metropolitan, has assembled this resource with the assistance of Museum colleagues, particularly Carlos Picón, Joan Mertens, Elizabeth Milleker, Seán Hemingway, and Christopher Lightfoot in the Department of Greek and Roman Art. We thank them for their support. Greek Art from Prehistoric to Classical: A Resource for Educators is made possible by a generous grant from Mr. and Mrs. Frederick P. Rose, whose vision of excellence is transforming education in New York.
